In recent years, co-working spaces have gained popularity as an alternative to working in coffee shops and home offices.

In the simplest sense, a co-working space is an environment that is designed to accommodate self-employed professionals and workers from different companies who come to do work. These spaces are community centers, collaboration hubs and social spaces where people of all backgrounds can work, meet, brainstorm and get acquainted.

The precursor to modern co-working started in 1995 in Berlin as a “hackerspace.” The movement evolved and grew in the early 2000s and significantly accelerated in the aftermath of COVID-19. Subsequently, with “work-from-home” culture on the rise, these spaces are highly sought after.

So if you're looking for a co-working space where you can enjoy, expand, and explore a new setting, look no further than WTC's Centre Space. Flexi desks and private rooms are available to rent daily, short term and long term. For more details, contact centrespace@jakland.co.id.
