ONE MILLION TREES

One Million Tree Day Movement is commemorated every January 10th as an effort to save forests and preserve the environment.

The purpose of commemorating this day is to create a healthy, cool and beautiful environment. This warning is important as an effort to encourage the preservation of trees that are useful for human life.

The movement is basically to plant trees in various places which can help to prevent flooding, provide food or shelter for animals, and avert global warming.

The steps for planting trees should also be balanced with maintenance so that the trees that have been planted can grow well.

In Indonesia, this initiative was first launched in 1993 with hopes that each province would plant and exceed one million trees.

You can support the movement by planting your own trees or join eco communities in your city.
